the title of the thesis, the religious philosophy of "johannes climacus", reflects the principal argument that guides our study: that philosophical fragments and concluding unscientific postscript can only be fully understood when they are read as the works of johannes climacus, rather than his creator, soeren kierkegaard. existentialism kierkegaard—1 kierkegaard (1813-55) - his principal pseudonymous author, johannes climacus, declared that his task was "to make difficulties everywhere" in commenting on one work climacus states: "thus it is left to the reader to put it all together by himself, if he so pleases, but nothing is done for a reader's comfort" (hong, introduction ix) faith, paradox, reason and the and kierkegaard - faith, paradox, reason, and the argumentum 3 both johannes climacus and s"ren kierkegaard have written on faith, paradox and reason. while s"ren kierkegaard is the creator of the persona of johannes climacus, it is by no means clear what the re-lation between the two is. kierkegaard insists that none of the remarks the role of irony in kierkegaard's philosophical fragments - johannes climacus is a kind of ph ilosopher, and paying attention to the literary character of fragments by no means requires us to regard the book as having no serious philosophical and theological content. the complaint that authors such as lowrie and thulstrup effectively ignored the pseudonymous character of fragments is partially valid. soren kierkegaard and the supremacy of faith - under the pseudonym of johannes climacus. johannes climacus does not claim to be a christian, but he is at odds with the philosophy of hegel, who sees faith as a stepping-stone to the ultimacy of reason. climacus is intent on demonstrating that, ... soeren kierkegaard and the supremacy of faith ... kierkegaard and truth as subjectivity 1 stephen james minton - open to him. in 'anti-climacus' (the 'author' of the sickness unto death), we see a self-imposing of a limit, perhaps, to the level of christianity to which kierkegaard could aspire: "...whereas johannes climacus places himself so low that he even says that he himself subjectivity is truth soren kierkegaard - "i, johannes climacus, born in this city, now thirty years old, a decent fellow like most folk, suppose that there awaits me, as it awaits a maid and a professor, a highest good, which is called an eternal happiness. i have heard that christianity is the way to that good, and so i ask, how may i establish a proper relationship to christianity?" kierkegaard's romantic legacy - muse.jhu - in this regard, johannes climacus, more closely than any of the other pseudonyms, seems to be speaking as kierkegaard himself. when considering how we should relate to knowledge, kierkegaard's thought takes its beginning with a negative criticism of how not to relate to truth. kierkegaard calls hegel a johannes climacus who wants to climb to the concluding unscientific postscript to the philosophical crumbs - concluding unscientific postscript to the philosophical crumbs a mimic, pathetic, dialectic compilation an existential contribution by johannes climacus illusion and offense in philosophical fragments ... - kierkegaard's pseudonym johannes climacus turns feuerbach's theory of projection back on feuerbach himself in order to emphasize that a religion of transcendence necessarily offends the understanding. in describing offense, climacus suggests that the immanentist critic himself, and not the christian, is the victim of an illusion. faith without reason: a conversation between kierkegaard ... -
